It is used to create script files executable on Windows operating system. Normally, normally these files have an extension of .bat or .cmd. When being executed, they open a "Command Prompt" window, which normally has a typical black background, white text. The batch files (.bat, *.cmd) are called script files which can contain commands interfering operating system. Note: a language that is equivalent to batch but used for Linux operating system is Shell, with script files ending in *.sh. Batch uses @rem to start a Comment line, which is used to annotate the purpose of command lines in the program and they are ignored when the program excutes. To start Batch language, we create a file with the hello.bat name, and write statements showing on the screen the line of "Three", "Two", "One", "Hello World!". @rem My First Batch file! @echo off echo Three echo Two echo One echo Hello World! pause Double click on hello.bat file to execute it. You can also execute Batch file from CMD. Open the CMD and CD programs to go to the folder containing the file to be executed. Execute the hello.bat file from CMD: CommandDescriptionEchoShow a line on screenpauseSuspend the program and wait for a user to press Enter button to continue. The @echo off command is used to stop the command prompt display mode. This mode is on by default. Let's see the difference between @echo off and @echo on by the following illustration: CSS3 is changing how we build websites. Even though many of us are still reluctant to start using CSS3 due to the lack of support in some browsers, there are those out there that are moving forward and doing some amazing stuff with its cool new features. No longer will we have to rely on so much JavaScript and images to create nice looking website elements such as buttons and menu navigations. You can build a cool rounded navigation menu, with no images and no javascript, and effectively make use of the new CSS3 properties border-radius and animation. This link in bio menu works perfectly well with Firefox, Opera, Chrome and Safari. The dropdown also works on non-CSS3 compatible browsers such as IE7+, but the rounded corners and shadow will not be rendered. CSS3 transitions could one day replace all the fancy jQuery animation tricks people use. No Javascript is required Works in browsers with disabled Javascript or if a browser has no Javascript support at all. Responsive menu Menu smoothly adapts to the viewing environment. See responsive menu demo. SE friendly Search engines and text-only browsers friendly. Browser support Supports all modern browsers. Supported Devices Supports all modern mobile menu devices (iPhone, iPad, Android, BlackBerry, Windows Phone). GUI interface Visual design user interface allows you to create your menus without the need for complex hand coding. Use the preview window to view your menu design while you are developing and customizing. 100% CSS-driven designs The menu is based on HTML list of links (UL/LI structure) and CSS only. No additional non-css params are used. Great CSS3 properties Multi-level dropdown menu is created using CSS3 rounded corners (CSS3 border-radius), CSS3 shadow (box-shadow and css3 text-shadow), Opacity, background and font colors, linear gradient and radial CSS3 gradient are also supported by free website maker. CSS3 only effect for dropdown appearance, Fade, Slide, etc. Mega Menu with Multicolumn Submenus Create Mega Menu with multicolumn submenus. Specify the number of rows you want to have.
